GRANTS AND CONTRACTS

- 2017 U.S. Department of Agriculture/NIFA and U.S. Department of Defense. “Military REACH: Applied Research and Intentional Outreach to Support Military Family Readiness.” $600,000 (Mallory Lucier-Greer, Principal Investigator, Catherine W. O’Neal, Jay A. Mancini, and Angela Duke, Co-Investigators).
- 2016 U.S. Department of Agriculture/NIFA and U.S. Department of the Army (Army Community Service). “Evaluation plan for Army Community Service: Mobilization, deployment and stability support operations.” $289,000 (Catherine W. O’Neal, Principal Investigator, Mallory Lucier-Greer and Jay A. Mancini, Co-Investigators).
- 2015 Office of Family Assistance, U.S. Administration for Children & Families. Sub-Award to UGA through ICF International (Fairfax, VA). “National Resource Center for Healthy Marriage and Families.” $300,000/year (Jay A. Mancini, UGA Principal Investigator). This is the initial year of a 5-year performance period.
- 2015 Office of Family Assistance, U.S. Administration for Children & Families. “The Integration of Healthy Marriage and Relationship Education into Family and Children Services: A Campus-community partnership.” $8.2 million (Ted Futris, Principal Investigator; Jay A. Mancini, Co-Investigator). This is the initial year of a 5-year performance period.
- 2014 Office of Family Assistance, U.S. Administration for Children & Families. Sub-Award to UGA through ICF International (Fairfax, VA). “National Resource Center for Healthy Marriage and Families.” $294,786 (Jay A. Mancini, UGA Principal Investigator). UGA responsibilities are focused on monitoring and assessing progress of training institutes on relationship education and institutional integration.
- 2012 U.S. Department of Defense and USDA. “Building community capacity: Models and methods for U.S. Military family support organizations.” $1,400,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This is a continuation of the 2011 award to enhance the online training curriculum for family support professionals, and includes an individual and family assessment element to support program development and implementation.

- 2011 U.S. Department of Defense and USDA. “Building community capacity: Models and methods for U.S. military family support organizations.” $909,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project includes development of an online educational program for DOD Military Community and Family Policy that will be accessed by military and civilian professionals working with military families (collaborator is Gary L. Bowen, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill).
- 2011 U.S. Department of Defense and USDA. “Joint family support assistance program (JFSAP) evaluation.” $237,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator and Deborah C. Mancini, C., Co-Investigator). JFSAP was established by Congressional mandate, and is attached to DOD Military Community and Family Policy. This research and policy project includes assessment of military personnel/leadership across the 50 states and four territories, development of an evaluability assessment, as well as determining if the mandate has been met.
- 2009 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army youth development project enhanced evaluation study of youth and family resilience.” $1,610,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). There are three elements to this research initiative, including a survey of over 1,000 youth in Army families, a family survey of over 600 Army families (adults and youth in those families), and the establishment of an extensive military family research library.
- 2008 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Virginia Tech Army youth development program implementation and assessment project.” $2,196,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project is currently active at Virginia Tech and led by Lydia I. Marek, who has recently developed a study focused on family reintegration post-deployment. A second element of this funding was a second study on effects of deployment of youth in military families, led by Angela Huebner.
- 2008 College of Liberal Arts and Human Sciences, Dean’s Research Fellowship, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. “Homeless veterans in the United Kingdom: Examining antecedents and consequences.” $14,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). The intersections of vulnerability and resilience are the center-pieces of this project, which occurred in London. Interview and structured assessments were used to examine these intersections.
- 2007 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army youth development and Operation Military Kids (OMK) project.” $645,124 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). Operation Military Kids is an Army-sponsored initiative focused on Guard and Reserve families; the project began the process of monitoring OMK activities across the 50 states and four territories. Note: projects below indicated with two asterisks were part of this multi-year initiative.
- 2007 U.S. Department of Agriculture, Children, Youth, and Families At-Risk Initiative. “CYFAR evaluation technical assistance and program sustainability project.” $91,000. (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators). This project began many years before and was the primary data vehicle for USDA’s tracking of its community based programs for at risk families. Note: projects below indicated by an asterisk are part of this initiative.

- 2006 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “CYFAR evaluation technical assistance project.” $90,000. (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2006 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army youth development and Operation Military Kids (OMK) project.” $598,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 2005 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “CYFAR evaluation technical assistance project.” $90,000. (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2004 U.S. Department of Defense and University of North Carolina. “National citizen-soldier demonstration support project impact assessment.” $177,000. (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). The Family and Community Research Laboratory at Virginia Tech provided the expertise needed to evaluate this state-wide initiative to support Guard and Reserve families, including an online data collection system.
- 2004 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “CYFAR evaluation technical assistance project.” $76,000. (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2004 Military Family Research Institute. “Adjustment of youth in military families to parental deployment.” $204,000 (Angela J. Huebner and Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigators). This project served as the precursor to the study currently funded by the Army; focus was on youth adjustments to parental separation.
- 2004-2005 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army youth development project.” $927,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 2003 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “National community-based program sustainability study.” $78,400. (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2002 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army youth development project.” $127,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 2002 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “National community-based program sustainability study.” $56,000 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2002 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Sustainability of youth at risk and state

- strengthening community based projects: The national youth at risk program sustainability study.” $154,500 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2001 National Institute on Aging (NIH R03). “Nursing home employees: Community ecology and retention.” $73,400 (Karen A. Roberto and Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigators). This pilot study accessed the theoretical frameworks focused on community structures and processes, and applied them to long-term care environments.
- 2001 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army school-age and teen project technical support program.” $177,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 2000 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Sustainability of youth at risk and state strengthening community based projects: The national youth at risk program sustainability study.” $146,600 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 2000 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army school-age and teen project technical support program.” $110,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 1999 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Army school-age and teen project: Task V-technical support contract.” $322,212 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)**.
- 1999 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “National youth at risk program sustainability study.” $69,030 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 1998-2001 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Army school-age and teen project evaluation-phase 2.” $482,000 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators). This project tracked the development and implementation of broad-based programming focused on youth in Army families; the project included an evaluation of the success of this implementation, with a particular emphasis on youth development programming.
- 1998 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Electronic connectivity and sustainability study-phase 3.” $50,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project was designed to examine and evaluate the role of technology in sustaining community based programs for at risk families, and in particular its contribution to sustaining programs in disadvantaged communities. Note: This was the final year of this initiative; earlier funding years are indicated by three asterisks.
- 1997-1998 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Sustainability of community-based programs: Analysis of youth at risk sites.” $164,428 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators)*.
- 1996-1998 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Evaluation of Army school-age and teen project.” $468,807 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project was the initial phase of the work on assisting HQ Army Child, Youth and School Services re-direct their programming for youth and adolescents, including data collection at selected installations.

- 1997 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Electronic connectivity and sustainability study-phase 2.” $50,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)***.
- 1996 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Electronic connectivity of community-based programs.” $38,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator)***.
- 1996-1997 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Sustainability of community-based youth at-risk programs.” $225,000 (Jay A. Mancini and Lydia I. Marek, Principal Investigators). This was the initial funding for the long term focus on the sustainability of community based programs for at risk families. Products including a monitoring system developed for USDA, a sustainability theoretical framework, and a multi-dimensional instrument for assessing sustainability.
- 1995-1996 National Network for Family Resiliency (USDA). “Model community programs for children and families.” $27,500 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project focused on six community based programs regarding their methods for making a difference in their communities.
- 1995 U.S. Department of the Army and USDA. “Evaluation of Army school-age and teen project.” $40,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This was the initial project that HQ Army Child, Youth and School Services funded; funding that continues both at The University of Georgia and at Virginia Tech.
- 1995-1997 U.S. Department of the Air Force and USDA. “Management of family violence research and training project.” $340,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project was designed to provide technical support for Air Force professionals who worked with family violence issues. In 1997 Sandra Stith, now at Kansas State University, became PI.
- 1995-1996 Virginia Department of Mental Health, Mental Retardation, and Substance Abuse Services. “Early intervention for infants and toddlers and their families: Seventh year participation in Part H.” $113,675 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project was a collaboration between Virginia Tech and local service providers dealing with children’s developmental problems. Note: Any project title that includes “Part H” was part of this same initiative.
- 1995-1996 U.S. Department of Agriculture. “Strong families, competent kids and caring community.” $46,600 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This grant supported Virginia Tech’s participation across multiple tasks as USDA was developing its now substantial focus on at risk families; included was developing literature reviews related to promising program practices.

- 1994-1995 Virginia Department of Mental Health, Mental Retardation, and Substance Abuse Services. "Early intervention for infants and toddlers and their families: Sixth year participation in Part H." $79,872 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator).
- 1994-1995 U.S. Department of Agriculture. "Strong families, competent kids and caring community." $54,400 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This project was the beginning of our work with the USDA initiative to support at risk families, which included providing technical assistance to community based programs across the U.S.
- 1984-1985 Andrus Foundation. "When family interaction promotes morale: An analysis of older parent-adult child relationships." $40,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). The focus of this project was on the close relationships older adults had with their adult children, including patterns of interaction, exchange of support, and the provisions of social support.
- 1985 Virginia Tech Educational Foundation . "Case-studies of aged parent-adult child relationships." $1,000 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This university internal funding was used to follow-up the Andrus Foundation supported study to gather qualitative data on a random sample of participants in the original study.
- 1979-1980 Virginia Tech Research Division (National Institutes of Health, Biomedical Research Support Grant Program). "Effects of health on the relationship between morale and leisure lifestyles of older adults" and "Components of health and their implications for morale among older adults." $4,300 (Jay A. Mancini, Principal Investigator). This university internal funding was used to extrapolate health related data from dissertation data collected at The University of North Carolina at Greensboro.
